IMPORTANT INFORMATION REGARDING YOUR INSURANCE AND HOSPITALIZATION

Most insurance companies are now requiring that any hospitalization be pre-certified. This means if you are pregnant and considering surgery or planning to be induced, your insurance company needs to be notified PRIOR to your admission and may require a referral from your PCP for your hospital admission. Some surgical procedures, such as a scheduled cesarean section, require a second opinion as to medical necessity. It is your responsibility to verify with your insurance company your coverage for surgery and whether a second opinion is needed.

As a part of this process, insurance companies are also requiring that patients be discharged within a certain time frame. It is YOUR RESPONSIBILITY to notify your physician, while in the hospital, of how many days you are allowed to stay. If there is a medical reason for extending your stay, you must notify your insurance company. It is a good idea to include your insurance company's phone number when packing for your hospital stay. If your stay is extended without a medical reason, you are responsible for the charges incurred. Any questions or concerns, please call your insurance company for clarification.
